Superintendent's Report

To the School Board and Citizens of Sandwich:

I hereby submit for your consideration my second annual report as superintendent of the Sandwich schools.

The Teacher Situation

The main purpose of the new school law is the equalization of educational opportunity. To provide as far as possible as good schools in the rural districts of the state as for the children of the cities and large towns. This was to be accomplished partly by making it possible through state aid for the poorer districts to pay salaries high enough to obtain just as good teachers as the richer places could afford. The law has failed largely in this purpose, but through no fault of its own. The constantly increasing shortage of properly qualified teachers has resulted in a lessening rather than an increase of efficiency in rural teaching. Tens of thousands of teachers who had never been paid more than enough to keep body and soul together were literally starved out of the profession during the second and third years of the war, and forced to seek better-paid employment. Then the cities with their graded schools, higher salaries and more attractive living conditions took their pick of what was left, leaving the less desirable of the rural positions to be filled with untrained and inexperienced teachers.

So, in spite of the fact that state aided towns are financially able to compete with the cities in paying adequate salaries to qualified teachers, this advantage has so far been more than offset by the lack of sufficient properly qualified teachers to fill all rural positions even at the substantially increased salaries of the current year. Money will not hire teachers when there are no teachers to hire. Sandwich, not having qualified for state aid by making the necessary appropriations at the last district meeting, has been even more handicapped in this respect than neighboring towns.

Now just a word regarding the desirability of employing trained teachers. It is just as necessary that teachers should have special training for their work as it is that physicians and lawyers and engineers should have special training for their work. The fact of having attended school, even including college, does not qualify a person for a teaching position any more than living in a house qualifies a man to be a carpenter, or an architect.

We have some good experienced teachers, you say, who never had any professional training outside of their own experience in teaching. Yes, but what about the poor children they practiced on while gaining that experience. Would you want a carpenter to get his first training and practice in building a house for you? Would you want a man with no special training to try to learn the art of surgery by practicing on you in a delicate operation? Would you trust an important law case in the hands of a person untrained in the law? Then why should we trust the mental and moral training of children to the hands of persons not specially trained for their work?

True, there are now and then experienced teachers who never attended training school, but are shining stars in their profession. But they have got the required training, nevertheless, and have kept up to date by studying pedagogical books and periodicals and applying the principles learned therefrom in their daily work. They would never have attained much eminence through experience gained in merely imitating the methods of the teachers from whom they received their own instruction. Most untrained teachers will not try to keep up-to-date by professional study. They do not realize the need for so doing. They go on from day to day in the same deadening grind in imitation of the teachers who taught them and who in their turn probably imitated their own teachers. Successive regimes of such imitators of imitations has produced a system of rural education suited only to the middle ages and so out of touch with modern conditions as to require drastically progressive remedial legislation to ensure proper education of rural school children.

I do not advocate the wholesale removal of experienced but untrained teachers even if it were possible to replace them at once with trained teachers. Many such teachers are doing excellent work along the lines of their limited knowledge and experience. Some of them are awakening to the necessity of study in order to get in touch with modern aims and methods, and with proper supervision and encouragement in conjunction with their years of experience in handling children will become efficient modern teachers. Most of them have seen years of faithful, arduous, and meagerly paid service and deserve every consideration commensurate with their willingness to study for their own professional improvement and to co-operate in the upbuilding of the school and the community. These teachers should be kept and trained in service whenever they prove amenable to such training. Otherwise their services should be dispensed with and more adaptable persons employed.

And it should be the general policy of the board and superintendent, when a teacher is lost either through resignation or otherwise, to replace her with the highest grade of trained teacher available. For reasons above noted this policy could not be followed out with much resultant improvement in the teaching force during the last two years. In some cases when a teacher has been lost her place has of necessity been filled with a teacher of lower grade rather than higher. But the indications are that the teacher situation will improve from now on and if the supply of trained teachers ever approaches the demand it will be possible to supply the rural schools of the state with teachers of the highest grade.

In regard to teachers' salaries those who look forward to a general reduction in teachers' pay will be disappointed. The general level will probably remain about as it is at present. The wage-lowering tendency of an increasing supply of teachers will be offset by higher standards of qualification. This does not mean that there will be no readjustment of teachers' salaries relatively. Such readjustment is badly needed. The exigencies of the occasion have obliged us to pay about equal salaries to all teachers of experience, regardless of their relative efficiency and to pay untrained teachers more than their services were worth in order to keep the schools open. The best teachers are not yet getting enough for their services. They will get more. The value of some teachers to the school and the community can hardly be expressed in terms of dollars and cents. The least efficient are often getting more than they are worth and can look forward to salary reductions and to being dropped eventually unless they awake to the need for professional training plus a real live interest in their work. As normal conditions are approached teachers' salaries will be based more and more closely on their interest and efficiency in their work.

One of the most serious as well as most needless of the obstacles to the securing of high-grade teachers, especially for the more remote rural schools, is the lack of suitable boarding places within reasonable walking distance of the school buildings. There are usually comfortable homes conveniently located, but they will not board the teachers. Here is a chance for civic patriotism in general and Women's Clubs in particular to function to practical advantage in the community.

School Supplies and Equipment

It ought to be evident to any thinking individual that the narrower the range of books read and studied by children the narrower will be their mental equipment and hence their outlook on life as adults. Spiritual and material progress of the present generation has been and is being woefully retarded by the narrow views and prejudices of local leaders induced by the soul-cramping narrowness of the traditional school program of twenty years ago and more with its meager amount of broadening subject matter. Drill, drill, drill, was the rule, cultural knowledge and the higher thought processes in learning being utterly ignored. A wide variety of well-selected books read and studied is absolutely essential to any sort of education beyond the narrowest and dullest routine drill.

In making purchases of textbooks and supplies for the Sandwich schools I have assumed that the boys and girls of Sandwich are just as good and bright and worth just as much to the community and the state and the nation as those of any community in the state. I further assumed that the parents and other citizens of Sandwich believed these children to be the equals of any others and deserving of just as much consideration in the way of educational advantages. And that, if any reasonable advantages possessed by the girls and boys of other communities were lacking in the schools of Sandwich that these same parents and citizens would expect their superintendent to discover these lacks and remedy them.

In accordance with these assumptions, I have taken special pains to equip the schools of Sandwich not only with modern texts in accord with modern ideals, aims, and methods in education, but also with a good variety of the best informational books to supplement the regular texts in broadening the minds of the pupils. Is the expense worth while? Don't ask me. I might be prejudiced. Ask the boys and girls whether or not school is more interesting and worth while than it used to be. Ask them whether or not they are learning more or less than they used to. And then don't try to contradict them. They know, and I am willing to abide by their decision.

Although a good workman can do a passable job with a few makeshift tools, nevertheless, he can do a better job in much less time and with much less effort if he has proper tools with which to work. So it is with the good teacher. The more time and energy-saving devices a school-room is equipped with, the more efficiently can a teacher utilize her stock of time and energy for the benefit of the school and the community. In accordance with this point of view the Sandwich schools are being generously but not extravagantly supplied with most of the conveniences usually furnished in up-to-date rural school systems. These supplies are of great help to teachers and pupils in turning out more and better work.

Although the cost for these items of books and supplies has been much larger than Sandwich has been accustomed to pay in past years, it is no proof that present expenditures are too large. It may well be that past expenditures have been too small. Moreover, three things should be remembered: (a) that the better equipment of textbooks and supplies will result in constantly increasing efficiency in the schools as teachers and pupils become proficient in their use; (b) that prices of these goods have at least doubled in the last two or three years so that the actual increase in expenditure is not nearly so great as it seems at first thought; and (c) that after all, the expense for books and supplies is only a small part of the total cost of running the schools. Note also that, when the schools are once adequately equipped with books, the further expense for this item will be small for several years, so that the average annual expense will not be excessive for a term of years. It is not as though three or four hundred dollars had to be spent for books every year. By the time these new books have to be replaced we hope that Sandwich will have qualified for state aid so that the replacement will be taken care of by the five-dollar tax, without any extra strain on the town's finances.

There were certain other things in the way of permanent equipment such as maps, globes, reference books, adjustable seats, etc., with which I found the schools to be very poorly supplied. This need has been partially supplied by a gift from the Quimby Memorial Fund of six sets of splendid wall maps costing two hundred dollars. Globes are absolutely essential to the efficient teaching of geography. In the Sandwich schools there are none or practically none since what there are are in such poor condition as to be most useless. Encyclopedias and other reference books are practical necessities in any properly conducted modern school. Song books are needed also. A few adjustable seats are needed in each room in order that the various sizes of children may be seated with due regard to their physical welfare. All these articles come under the head of "new equipment" and are not provided for in the regular school funds. The district should make a special appropriation of about $200 for three years to provide for these serious needs of the schools. Once equipped with these things, it would be years before they would have to be replaced and replacement of school equipment is provided for by state aid.

Improvements

Last year I called your attention to my extensive use of standardized tests and measurements in the schools and explained briefly their advantages over any other method of testing children for progress in school work. This system of testing has been still further extended and refined and its advantages become more apparent every day as the achievement records of the pupils become more complete. I have on file in my office the complete progress records of every pupil in the district since I began work here. These records are in condensed and easily understood graphic form and represent the pupils' actual accomplishments as measured in the most scientifically accurate way yet devised. They enable us to group the children into classes in such a way as to obtain the most uniform amount and quality of work from each class; they enable me to advise intelligently with teachers as to the most advisable treatment to be accorded individual pupils who are having trouble with their school work; they enable teachers to locate the special weaknesses of individuals and classes so that they can concentrate their teaching effort where it will do the most good; and they furnish a strong motivating influence to the pupils themselves. They also provide a safe, sane, and impartial basis for promoting pupils from grade to grade, leaving no chance for charges of favoritism on the part of teachers. Furthermore they measure accurately the efficiency of teachers as well as the progress of pupils and at one and the same time. The record of the pupils' progress is the measure of the teacher's ability. It is perfectly fair to measure a teacher's efficiency by the progress made by mentally normal children under her instruction, provided we have some means of knowing which are the mentally normal pupils and just how much progress they ought to make each year. The standardized tests and scales provide just that necessary means.

The intensive campaign began in the schools last year for improvement in silent reading ability is beginning to bear rich fruit. Ability to gather thoughts rapidly and silently from the printed page is being rapidly developed in all the schools where teachers have co-operated systematically and intelligently in carrying out the silent reading program by approved methods. The progress made by the four lower grades is particularly encouraging since it is in these grades that good reading habits must be acquired, if at all.

Special attention has also been given to speed and accuracy in the fundamental operations of arithmetic with excellent results. By means of the Courtis Standard Practice Tests and other special drill methods, a high degree of proficiency has been developed in all grades, but especially in the lower grades, as the younger children are always more responsive to drill work than the older children and the results are more lasting.

The altering of the school buildings last fall so as to have all windows in the left and rear of the pupils is the most notable improvement of the year along the line of proper sanitary measures for the protection of the health of the children. This arrangement of the lighting does away with the dangerous and annoying cross lights and the short blackboards between windows. The sight destroying front window has also been eliminated. Walls repainted a light color and ceilings whitened, together with light colored curtains, make available for purposes of vision most of the light admitted at the windows instead of permitting the greater part of it to be absorbed by dark colored walls and green curtains.

I take pleasure in expressing at this time my appreciation of the continued helpful co-operation and intelligent interest of the school board in my work.

Respectfully submitted,

SAMUEL S. BROOKS,

Supt. of Schools.
